

STANLEY'S

RESTAURANT

Where Friendship Meets Flavour

When a friend suggested that David Hockney might like to get a dachshund, no one could have predicted the lifelong, influential friendship that would be struck up between the artist and Stanley – the characterful red dachshund pup he adopted.

Dachshunds are known for their loyalty, their love of comfort and their playful, inquisitive natures, and Stanley was an archetype of the breed. Curious, lively and delighted by good food and a comfortable cushion, he soon became a firm fixture in Hockney's studio, charming visitors and inspiring the experimental artist to explore themes of home and simple, everyday pleasures in his work.

Drawing on these same values of domesticity and comfort, plus Hockney's own deep connection to his Yorkshire roots, Stanley's restaurant is a playful, pleasurable nod to Bradford's colourful history of creativity and culinary riches.
